Healthcare regulatory news

According to a new GAO report, HHS has not developed detailed plans to address weaknesses in the nation's organ transplantation system, despite over 100,000 patients being on the waiting list. GAO recommends that HHS create specific, actionable plans with milestones to reform the system, improve organ allocation, and ensure more effective oversight.

Texas Governor Greg Abbott directed the Texas Health and Human Services Commission and its Office of Inspector General to further investigate potential Medicaid fraud in light of allegations of fraudulent activity in other states. Abbott mandated additional safeguards, including reviews of high-risk services like autism care, staffing for managed care organizations' investigative units, targeted training, and a progress report due by March 15, 2026.

Healthcare law and policy news

The U.S. Supreme Court upheld the Fifth Circuit's prior ruling that the No Surprises Act (NSA) creates no private right of action for providers to enforce Independent Dispute Resolution awards against insurers in court. The decision solidifies that parties must rely on the NSA's administrative process rather than pursuing legal or judicial enforcement.

CMS reported that national healthcare spending rose to $5.3T in 2024, a 7.2% increase from the previous year. Insured population coverage dipped slightly to 91.8% amid Medicaid unwinding and expiring ACA subsidies, while insurers faced margin pressure from elevated medical costs.

A new bipartisan funding bill would extend Medicare telehealth flexibilities until December 2027 and the hospital-at-home program through September 2030—avoiding their January 30 expiration. The measure also includes PBM reforms such as delinking PBM compensation from drug prices in Medicare Part D, and additional reporting requirements for employer plans to promote drug pricing transparency.

Healthcare fraud settlements under the False Claims Act reached a record $5.7B in FY 2025, more than triple the previous year's total. These settlements, primarily involving federal programs like Medicare and Medicaid, fueled a record $6.8B in total judgments across all industries, driven by a significant increase in whistleblower lawsuits.

American Academy of Pediatrics and other health organizations are suing HHS to reverse recent changes to the childhood vaccine schedule. The lawsuit argues that the new schedule, which reduces the number of recommended vaccinations, was created without proper scientific consultation and compromises public health.
